Israel was without a civil aviation link to the outside world for the second day today. Discussions yesterday between Government nego-tintors and the Histadrut over ways of ending the general strike of 1,000 aviation workers ended in stalemate. The contacts are to be resumed today.

The Transport Ministry spokesman said last night the Histadrut's Central Committee yesterday rejected a Government bid to settle the labour dispute with an offer of special monthly "aviation increments" only to those civil aviation workers whose professions warrant it, or who would be entitled to it because of their special conditions of work.

The spokesman said the Histadrut insisted the Government agree that 80 per cent of the civil avia-tion workers would be entitled to such supplementary pay. The Aviation Workers Committee, which declared the strike represents 1,000 control tower operators, mechanics, firemen and ambulance workers, aircraft cleaning staff and others.

Transport Minister Shimon Peres. told The Jerusalem Post last night affected 60 international and domesin reply to a question that he is not at present considering resort to ad-ministrative orders. He added that he is scheduled to meet with the avaition workers this afternoon, and hopes a solution to the dispute will be found.

Ministers, including Prime Minister Golda Meir, met "informally" with members of the Histadrut's Central Committee. It was agreed that the latter will meet this morning with the Ministerial Wages Committee, including Finance Minister Pinhas Sapir, in an attempt to work out a Secretary of State William Rogers mutually acceptable formula with which to confront the strikers.

> There were no direct contacts with the strikers' representatives. Histadrut Secretary-General Yitzhak Ben-Aharon summoned the Central Committee to an extraordinary session early yesterday morning to discuss the situation and to be on hand for any break in the dispute. IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF MOSES

Foreword by Prof. Yigael Yadin The story of the first and greatest of the Hebrew prophets - spiritual leader and statesman, Lawgiver and resistance commander and the epic chronicle of the early days of Israel - the great freedom trek, the establishment of the religion and the moulding of the nation - are retold with rare drams, insight and scholarship. The account is faithful to the Biblical record and draws on the latest srchaeological findings.

Superb photographs taken especially for this volume illustrate the setting for this moving and remarkable saga.

Beauty queens are brighter this year'

By PAUL BACKSHALL LONDON (Reuter). — The girls who will line up for tonight's Miss World contest are more intelligent than their counterparts of a few years ago, accord-ing to the organizers of the annual event. As usual, the betting on who will win is keen, with Miss Australia, photographer's model Belinda Green, closely followed by Miss Sweden, Miss United Kingdom and Miss Israel. "We have a very bright bunch of girls this year," a contest organizer said. "More girls than usual are students and they understand much more readily By PAUL BACKSHALL

"The spokesman said the old image of beauty-contests had gone. The modern entrant was intel-ligent and quick to learn he said, despite attacks by Women's Liberation campaigners who brand the girls taking part in the contest as "cattle," and the organizers their "merchants."

"These girls are attracted to the contest mainly because of the opportunity to travel," the spokes-man said. On top of this, of course, is the chance to win a prize of £3,000 and a contract for £10,000 in exchange for being Miss World for a world

In fact the winner can easily and up with $50,000 at the end of a gruelling 12 months of modelling, opening fetes, launching ships and living in hotels and airliners. The £10,000 guarantee attached to this year's contract appears to be an attempt by Mecca to prevent a repetition of the embarassing situation declined to sign and went home to Brasil. Amman plan for Jordan Valley takes peace for granted

By JOHN DE ST. JORRE AMMAN (Ofns). ----

DETAILS of a new economic plan, which will change the face of the Jordan Valley and have wide political implications for the Jordanian Government's relations with Israel and the Palestinians, will be published here shortly.

Over the next three years the Jordan Valley Commission, the body specially created to supervise the task, will establish 15 new towns and settlements in the valley, almost doubling the acreage under cultivation and tripling its current population. The project will cost £36 million, most of it coming from foreign, and predominantly Western, sources. Much of the new land will be divided into small plots of about 40 durams each and given to impoverished Palestinian refugees from the camps in and around Jordan's cities. Folitically, the scheme appears to affirm that Jordan has abandoned the "hot war" with Israel. The 100 km.-long valley, one of the most crucial frontiers between Israel and the Arabs, would crystallize into a per-manent demilitarized zone on the Jordanian side, if the plan is implemented. This would make resurrection of the Arabs' "Eastern Front" and the return of the Palestinian ter-rorists to Jordan difficult.

rorists to Jordan difficult. No one will be compelled to move to the Valley, and there will be no loss of refugee status. But the process will inevitably thin out the denser centres of Palestinian urban population, still the greatest potential threat to Sking Hussein's regime. The sconomic benefits are clear. The 1967 war, and the attrition that followed, pre-vented the Jordan Valley from fulfilling its natural desting as the "greenhouse" of the Middle Elast. The new scheme could make the dream come true and significantly increase dream come true and significantly increase

Jordan's ability to stand on its own feet. I last drove along the valley's powdery floor in October 1970 in the wake of the bitter fighting in the cities between the Jordan-ian Army and the Palestinian terrorists. It was then a dead land, the bones of its towns and villages broken by the Israel bombard-ments and bleached by the sun, its fertile fields ground into dust. Nearly all the 90,000 people who used to live there had fied to the hills.

Today more than half that number are back. So is the Jordanian Army, but only in token strength and in the role of builder ra-ther than destroyer. It mans road blocks, clears mines which still kill the occasional donkey or goat, and helps to grade the dirt roads. The northern part of the valley, irri-gated by the East Ghor Canal, now fully re-paired, is doing particularly well. The revival began in late 1970, but did not become marked until this summer. Greater security --there are now only four instead of 18 road blocks on the way down from Amman hardship in the towns, and the prospect of profitable winter crops have encouraged the flow.

I walked with one farmer down to his land on the banks of the River Jordan. He had lost a cousin in 1970, in an Israel air raid. His own farm had lain derelict for five years. He has no love for the Israelis, whose flag was flying from a bluff above us on the other side of the river, but he felt the terrorists were responsible for their own failures.

"They were not stabbed in the back," he said firmly. "They had their chance down here in 1968 and 1969 and messed it up. We did our part — we sacrificed our farms. They failed to do theirs, and now it's finished."

Sixty peasant farmers were back in the area. The number should double by the end of the year. The place is already a huge verdant vegetable garden: green peppers, to-matoes, cucumbers, string beans and aubor-gines the size of caulifowers. The biggest gines the size of caulinowers. The biggest problem now is the lack of markets, due mainly to the closure of Jordan's northern border by Syria, which has cut off the lu-crative Syrian and Lebanese markets. But my farmer friend was doing a nice little line in haricots vorts to France by air freight.

In the valley towns of Kraymeh and North Shuneh, schools have reopened, old houses have been repaired, new ones built and the streets are full of tractors and agricultural hardware.

During the fighting on the Golan Heights last week, the rumbling of the battle was heard in the northwestern tip of Jordan and fires blazed along the top of the hills in the distance. But that, everyone said with relief, was in Syria. Nothing could highlight more effectively King Hussein's opting out of the Arab-Israeli war.

The picture is similar, with one exception in the southern part of the Jordan Valley. The extension of the Ghor Capit southwards, combined with the Zerga River dam, is one of the major improvements envisaged in the new plan.

TAGE MINE

The exception is the town of Karameh. Founded in 1948 by Patestinian refugees, it is currently the centre of the tangled controversy. The town - the same means "honour" - became the centre of fedayeen activity in the valley after the 1967 war, more than half its population of 40,000 being refugees.

In March 1968, an Israel task force crossed the river, occupied the town briefly and virtually destroyed it. The Jordanian Army and although Israel avoided escalating the battle, it has since passed into Palestinian mythology and invested Karameh with a special emotional significance.

Reconstruction, with a self-help scheme run by the Lutheran World Federation, began a year ago. Five hundred houses, a school and a clinic have been rebuilt but only a handful of the original population have returned. This is because last June the Government suddenly changed its mind about recetablishing the old Karameh and decided to build a new town farther away from the river.

Prince Hassan, the King's younger brother and now in charge of developments, has given good economic reasons for the move. But the Palestinian inhabitanta are suspicions and cling emotionally to the old place, Karamch was the birthplace or their children, they fought and died there, and Hasaan is not a popular man among Pulestinians here. Behind the economic purpose they are a political spectre. The Government, they feel, wants to rid the valley of anything reacmbling refugee camps.

Meanwhile there is stalemate. The Lutherans have stopped work. Karameh's inhabit-ants remain on the plateau. The Government has buildozed down everything that was left after the shelling except the rebuilt houses.

New Karameh is still a blueprint and nothing more, and what was once the biggest and most important commercial centre in the entire valley remains virtually empty. However, it is the only anomaly in an area which now looks set fair for an era of peace.

TOP LEADERSHIP OF BRITISH JEWRY ARRIVE TO MARK ISRAEL'S SILVER JUBILEE 200-MEMBER MISSION HERE AT INVITATION OF GOVERNMENT AND JEWISH AGENCY

The fact that you and we are here, that we are alive, that we are building our homeland together, that we are able to fight as a free people for unrestricted Jewish im-migration and that there is a place for Jews to come to ... all this has happened because both you and we have realised the responsibility that we carry in this generation.

But even that is not enough. The true art is to do things with joy; not as a burden, but something you do joyfully and with satisfaction. In this partnership between the Jews of Israel and of the Diaspora we have done many things together. It has not been easy.

The Next Twenty-Five Years of the JPA A Proud Past - An Important Future

by Michael BARZILAY Executive Vice-Chairman JPA

Just as Israel is this year celebrating her twenty-fifth anniversary, so the JPA in Britain is proud to have reached that same historic landmark; for the JPA, as it is known throughout the length and breadth of Anglo-Jewry, came into being under that name in 1947. But its roots in fact go back further — to 1944, when the United Palestine Appeal was set up on the initiative of the late Lord Marks, who saw the need for British of the Old City, followed by a kid. THE JERUSALEM POST

الكفاحة المقص

By SHALOM COHEN IF you stop to think, the great rabbinical flap, which finally enabled two couples to have a decent Jewish wedding, is fraught with paradox. In the balance was a glaring case of personal hardship. About that there was no argument. All were agreed on the personal suffering involved. The reason why this was readily recognized is simple - the sufferers were few. For it is a rule that the degree of personal hardship, is in inverse proportion to the number of suf-ferers. When a hardship is shared by many, everyone gets a little bit, and it pinches less. Yet -and here is the paradox - when the hardship is the lot of only a few, how difficult to find a solution, what mighty efforts are needed, as we have seen.

To offset any misunderstand-ing --- there will be no attempt here to interpret halacha or tell the rabbis their business. There is something unedifying at the sight of outsiders taking a sud-den gatecrashing interest in the complexities of halacha. If I stopped to think about it, it was because of a friend.

This friend has a grievance he's been nursing for years. He is a man obsessed, especially when halacha is in the news. He is a Cohen, member of the priestly casta.

As everyone knows, he con't narry a divorcee. In point of fact, he doesn't want to. But it an-noys him. What really annoys him is that, as a Cohen, he is hemmed in by prohibition - yet gets none of the perks. Obligation of rank, yes, but none of the gravy that goes with it. "When was the last time any of us Cohens received a tithe, even the smallest of choice morsels ?" he asks.

He says ironically how he can just imagine hordes of dizzy di-vorcees waiting in ambush to catch a dispossessed fellow of the priestly elite. Dispossessed, but not unfrocked,

The Cohens are on permanent Reserves - unpaid - the tithes now go to askanim and expense account officials, so he believes.

This quarrelsome friend cannot be written off as an impractical crank, He's worked it out, The erquisites, the tithes, would be doled out through the income tax or National Insurance. He's made a study of the thing, can quote chapter and verse. Man, he says, cannot live by kavod alone, by the honour of titles. "I've asked many learned men about it, Cohanim, draped in their prayer shawls, recite the criestly blessing at the Western Wall-plenty of duties, but where are the perks?

Now, all this might seem just a new lobby, a matter of vested interest. But is it not an example of selective observance? Do we not see here confirmation of the rule, unwritten, that where a minority is affected we're up against mission impossible, but when everyone is in the same predicament much is possible.

Take, for example, shmitta, the seventh year in the calendar when the land must rest and lie fallow for a year, which happens to be going on right now. Solutions, most subtle, ingenious, and proper, have been found and adopted, allowing our agriculture to flourish and break more world records. The reason is obvious - the widespread habit of eating. Or take the prohibition on interest. If taken literally, the modern economy would grind to a standstill. A solution was found. But, when the needs are of a few, necessity is the stepmether of invention. pikuah nefesh - danger TT life permitting the casualty to by-pass prohibitions — could only happen to a few, there would be no such thing. No irreverance intended, the weakness in the mamzerim case was their small number.

Machiavellian argument to champion a particular cause, you might think (you probably being a Levite or plain Variate. But this friend is very proud and sensitive of his heritage, him being a Cohen. He misses his birthright. He burns when he hears of people going to the marriage registrar and, when asked whether they are a Cohen priest, answer, no, or vaccillate just to play safe. Wait and see, he says. When the wrong is righted and the perks start to flow, what proofs these same registrars will demand of Cohen claimants? As if there wasn't a simple test. You can tell a Cohen, he has that deprived look.

THE S5TH ANNUAL bazaar spon-

By Dr. MOSHE ATER Jerusalem Post Economic Editor In a month, price control regulations will expire, but the price freeze will largely continue.

Originally Commerce Minister Haim Bar-Lev intended to abolish the controls, but he has been forced to bow to what is called "political reality" - his party's refusal to do anything that could harm its prospects in an election year.

The manufacturers are upset over his retraction, for the controls will country's inflationary performance be modified, maintaining a freeze some 130 "essential" products, and advance notice before any increase). and cartels is also planned. As a re- ment policy. sult, firms will not be free to charge what the market will bear.

At a glance, this appears to be a victory for the Histadrut, which has consistently opposed price freedom on the grounds that it leads to profiteering. Consumers who saw their nominal wage gains offset by the advancing cost of living, are now offered the prospect of a 10 per cent rise in the cost-of-living wage rises (already contracted), and disappointing the people on the eve of elections.

Private consumption, which is reported to have increased excessively this year, can be expected to soar even more in 1973, pleasing the public, though not necessarily eco-nomists. Israel's conversion from a war economy to peace prosperity will thus be carried out painlessly.

Loud warnings

But the odd thing about this prospect is that those responsible for the policy are loudly warning against its effects. Mr. Bar-Lev has never retracted his statement that price controls - which are largely confined to industry — must ad-versely affect that sector's pro-fitability, and have already led to a marked decline of industrial invest-

Moreover, price control as applied in Israel, has turned out to be a more flexible instrument than is commonly supposed. It has slowed. but not prevented, the advance of industrial prices which proceeded during 1972 almost at the same pace as the c.o.l. That advance may have been inadequate from the market's or industry's angle, caus-ing a drop in profits for many companies, but this has been largely the result of the criteria applied to determining "legitimate" price

Since the controls were introduced as a mean of indirectly affecting incomes, the only criterion accepted was a rise in costs abroad. This was designed to stiffen industry's attitude against eventual demands of labour and services at home. However, the results achieved have been far from encouraging, and it is this failure to curb soaring in-ternal costs which has caused the decline in profitability, and which now serves as a main argument

Wider criteria

To counter that, official and even Histadrut spokesmen have sug-gested wider criteria which would also include approved hikes in local costs, including wages (at least for industries with a high labour content). This approach would require new guidelines. It would also reduce the efficacy of controls as a brake should not be forgotten, that the The real issue cherefore is not control formally imposed at last whether price controls should be year's devaluation was maintained maintained, but how they should operate, what purpose they should serve, and what price increases should be considered legitimate. torically averse to them, such as Obviously, none of these questions

ing to use price controls to curb wages, this attempt must, so it seems, be written off. Are the controls now to be used to reduce industrial profits in order to take the heat out of the investment boom? Or to reduce the pull of our home market in order to force manufacturers to devote more attention to exports? Or to weed out industries which the authorities consider unviable? Or to induce manufacturers to slash costs by mechanizing and laying off redundant manpower? In each case the control machinery should work in a different way.

If the principal purpose is, in-deed, to put off the inevitable price increases until after the election, then certainly the way control is working is of little importance. But then, too, its maintenance amounts to an abuse of economic means for political ends.

DARK SHADOW OF STR1KES

NAUTHORIZED strikes cast a deep shadow on the celebrations which opened yesterday to mark the 52nd anniversary of the Histadrut.

Five thousand technicians imperil the country's communica-tions system, 3,000 income tax officials caused unbudgeted losses to the Treasury, and 1,000 civil aviation employees locked out all air travel because they want another H100 a month

All the strikes were declared the workers' committees in defiance of the Histadrut Trades Union Department. The civil aviation workers' committee added to the affront by refusing to come to Tel Aviv to discuss the issues with Histadrut leaders, claiming they were busy "supervising the strike." When the Histadrut was established, it had political rather than professional aims. The Trades Union Department was designed to help members obtain reasonable wages in an economy over which the Histadrut had no control. Though conditions have changed com-pletely since 1948, the Histadrut system has not kept up. Its political and moral appeal, still meaningful for old-timers, no longer binds workers in a dis-longer binds workers in a dis-ciplined, responsible way. In addition, the Histadrut lacks any legal means to en-force its resolutions on its mem-bers. It is a voluntary organ-ization of workers with diverg-ing interests led by political leaders with conflicting political aims. It might have been ex-pected, for example, that the Histadrut, with its historical berifage of education for paheritage of education for national responsibility, would warn the postal technicians they could not expect Histadrut protection if they defied the ruling of the courts. But nothing of the sort happened. Memories linger of the disastrous attempt to hold a disciplinary "trial" of Ashdod port stevedores, paralyzing any attempt at discipline.

In the case of civil aviation personnel, the Histadrut fell vic-tim to its own vagueness. The principle of equal wages, in-creasingly ignored in many trades, was retained in a modi fied form, mainly in the public services where the employer is the Government, the municipalitles or the Jewish Agency. There is no hope of achieving agreement between any government office and its employees so long as the Treasury feels bound to adhere to a common pay schedule - concessions have been made by Ministers only to be set aside by the Civil Service Commissioner who abides by the instructions of the Minister of Finance. It is unlikely that the Finance Minister will ask the Knesset to change the law and allow differences in pay. The present crisis has also revealed the weakness of the Trades Union Department position, advocated especially by Mapam and former Ahdut Ha-avoda circles, that workers in tion, advocated especially the same jobs should be able to get more pay if they are employed in companies which can afford it.

The civil aviation personnel claim they are entitled to the same wages that El Al and Bedek give for similar jobs. The claim that the Government cannot afford this doesn't persuade them. Like the port workers before them, they want their share of the profits made by the airports. The Histadrut finds it difficult at best to restrain the economic demands of government em-ployees for no union leader dares tell a large group of workers that they must remain underpaid compared with others. Were the Histadrut a coheave political body, like it once was, it could exercise an influence, if not on the workers demands at least on the nature of the fight. But if the Histadrut cannot play this role, the political parties which compose it must show their mettle.

Arab leftists vow to fight Israel

THE click of rifle bolts was heard rever-berating across the cease-fire lines this week as Arab leftist parties pledged themselves to take an active part in the Palestinian sabotage movement's fight against Israel's existence.

At the end of a three-day "international" conference held in Beirut in the presence of observers from various Communist countries, the parties undertook on Wednesday night to resist any Middle East political settlement "based on consecrating the Zionist entity and recognizing the State of Israel." They pledged themselves further to "direct participation in the Palestinian revolution's military and political presence in all Arab states, especially those on the confrontation line (with Israel)."

Represented at the conference were the ruling parties of Egypt, Syria, Iraq, Algeria and South Yemen; the outlawed Sudanese Communist party; and "national" and "progressive" parties in Lebanon, Morocco and the Arab Guif states. The and-of-conference statement also contains a vow to "liquidate the imperialist presence and its strategic and economic interests, especially oil, in the Arab "homeland."

Yasser Arsfat, the leader of Fatah, the largest Palestinian sabotage organization, halled the pledges as a "revolutionary new step towards challenging the Zionist pre-

The intensified activity of the Arab leftist parties, which convened the Beirut conference, to drum up support for the terrorist movement, coincides with apparently mounting pressure on Cairo and Amman to abandon their acceptance of Middle Bast political set-tlements, especially the U.N. Security Councll's Resolution 242 of November 1987.

The terrorist attempt to obtain a declaration from Cairo retracting acceptance of the by Lutfi el-U.N. resolution was overruled Khouli, representing Egypt's single political party, the Arab Socialist Union, at the conference. This is hardly surprising, seeing that Egypt is using that resolution in its current diplomatic manocuvring, especially at the U.N., which is now debating the Middle East crisis. The pressure to shandon political settlements seems, however, to have had some in-fluence on Syria which, despite the fact that she has never accepted Resolution 242 or any other proposal for a settlement, has until recently shown political caution. Lately, she appears to be switching, to brinkmanship.

In an interview with the Kuwatti newspaper "As-Siyassa," the leader of the Syrian-backed Sa'eks sabotage organization, Zubair Mohsin, said that Damascus was preparing, in cooperation with the terrorists, to launch a war of attrition against Israel. Indeed, judging from the Syrian stand at the recent con-ference of Marab Foreign and Defence Ministers in Kuwait, the Syrians can be expected to submit a plan to this effect at the par-Arab chiefs of staff conference which is to take place in Cairo on December 12.

Syria might well act alone but, both the terrorists and the Arab-radical parties believe, not for long. They expect that a Syrian sotion and an eventual Israeli reply would sooner or later compel Egypt to reactivate Its war of attrition across the Suez Canal front. And in the event of the spread of hos-tuilies, Jordan would be pressed to join in, despite its vow to svoid what Anuman regards as another losing battle. The terrorists and the radical parties, on their part, would in those circumstances take upon themselves to ferment disturbances throughout the Arab world, hoping to achieve two major sims: an intensification of the anti-Israel and anti-Western struggle, and the destinction of non-leftist Argb regimes.

The grave situation into which Arab radeial circles are seeking to plunge the Middle East is unlikely to call for any outside intervention, at a time when the regional Arab governments sppear to be still powerful enough to crush any dissension over a possible settlement with Israel, and to thwart the mounting radical trends threatening the stability of the Arab world.

It is strange to see the Middle East situstion as it is today being dealt with in what has developed into an annual event at the U.N. General Assembly. The U.N. Middle East debate, based on the focal Resolution 242, has never before seamed so irrelevant. This, for two simple reasons: first, the parties concerned, after four years, still hold to their different interpretations of the resolution; and secondly, Egypt views that resolution as possibly binding on her but not committing the Palestinian sabotage movement which, with Cairo's support, pledges itself to continue its fight against Israel's very existence.

There seems to be a greater need than ever before for an alternative to Resolution 242, but this is unlikely to be found except within a new, negotiated framework which would eventually include all the basic issues. These appear to centre on four principles:

• Arab recognition of Israel's right to exist as a sovereign state, followed by an Is-raeli pledge to withdraw from territories oc-cupied in the 1967 war.

The establishment of internationally recognized Israel borders which would eventually determine adjustments in the present frontiers.

The solution of the problem of the Palestinian refugees through their resettlement in the Arab countries, with the emphasis on Jordan where they are likely to prefer to join their own community in building a new future. Peace agreements guaranteeing Israeli-Arab co-existence and lasting tranquillity.

Indeed, as far as Israel's relations with Jordan are concerned, except for the absence of the machinery for determining internationally recognized borders, the ideas behind these principles are already working towards true peace between the two countries.

Blacks in the U.S. are beginning to talk and act as an ethnic group. This process of ethno-genesis is a direct outcome of the Black Power movement. However, blacks will increasingly turn away from that movement and, instead of Black Power, will start playing the game of bloc power at local and state levels, rather than at the federal level."

This was stated by Professor Peter I. Rose, a specialist on ethnic and race relations, in a discussion yesterday on "Race relations in the U.S. and the recent elections," at the U.S. Cultural Centre in Jerusalem.
